Green Living makes Family Life easier with new Hi-tech Shower Timer

December 04, 2008

DENVER, CO (MMD Newswire) December 4, 2008 -- It is not often that green living can also have the added benefit of eliminating family feuds, at least the feuds over excessive showering times. Parents frequently wage battles with their teens in getting them out of the shower and on to school, soccer practice, the dinner table, etc. In some families, the water and energy bills skyrocket with the excessive showering, not to mention the cold water showers if you are last in line.

Efforts to staying green in the shower and manage shower times have largely been voluntary or ineffective with an array of devices ranging from hour glass timers to overly restrictive shower heads. Other bulky devices require expensive retro fitting and potentially hazardous electrical connections. While many households embrace the spirit and need for limiting showering times, the use of voluntary efforts seems to fade fast as that stimulating morning shower draws-on.

A Denver company has come up with a unique solution to control showering times. It is a fully automated device called the Shower Manager. It gives the shower taker the best of both worlds, a full-flow of water for a preset time frame followed by restricted flow. The head of the household locks in the full-flow time (5, 8 or 11 minutes) with a polarized sensor. The restricted flow provides just enough water to finish rinsing, but not enough to encourage continued showering, says Don Brunkhardt founder of the company. A 5-minute reset interval prevents the shower taker from overriding the system. The unit installs in minutes and is powered by a small 9-volt battery.

For more information visit www.ShowerManager.com. The unit is patent protected and is available only over the internet from the manufacturer. For more information contact Don Brunkhardt at 303-809-3758.
